I. INTRODUCTION

Defendants seek to dismiss Plaintiffs' claims by repackaging them as simply right-to-counsel claims in immigration court proceedings. But Plaintiffs and the class they represent seek something far broader—telephone access to the outside world, a constitutional and statutory right that has become all the more urgent because of COVID-19, as in-person visitation has become impracticable and discouraged by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) for personal and public health reasons.¹ But, due to Defendants' practices and a disregard for their own policies, telephone communication that is free, confidential, and of adequate duration has not been regularly available between legal representatives and detained individuals at the El Paso and Otero Service Processing Centers. Defendants' actions have largely cut off Plaintiffs and putative class members from the outside world, impeding their ability to find an attorney, interfering with the attorney-client relationship in the limited circumstances that are possible, hampering their ability to gather evidence, limiting their ability to speak with family or friends to support their case, and making it nearly impossible to prepare their removal defense, seek bond, file for affirmative immigration benefits, file a habeas petition, or file a civil rights lawsuit.

Now, in opposition to Plaintiffs' request for telephonic access to counsel, Defendants ask this Court to depart from Supreme Court precedent and the holdings of numerous other circuits and make new law that would prevent this Court from hearing challenges to institution-wide immigration detention conditions. Defendants attempt to recast Plaintiffs' claims as seeking review of their removal proceedings when their claims go far beyond that. Defendants also ask ¹ ICE Guidance on COVID-19: Visitation at Detention Facilities, <https://www.ice.gov/coronavirus> (last visited July 9, 2020) ("Non-contact legal visitation (e.g., Skype or teleconference) should be offered first to limit exposure to ICE detainees.").

1 this Court to dismiss this case on standing grounds, asserting that Plaintiffs' injuries do not
2 represent the injuries of the entire class – an argument appropriate only under a Rule 23 analysis.

3 Contrary to Defendants' position, Plaintiffs have standing and this Court has subject
4 matter jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' claims. Plaintiffs meet the Article III standing requirements, 5 which even Defendants concede. Seeking instead to narrow the claims for which Plaintiffs have 6 standing, Defendants improperly convert their standing argument to an adequacy-of-
7 representation argument. Moreover, this Court is not barred from hearing Plaintiffs' claims
8 under 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9), which the Supreme Court has narrowly interpreted. Quite simply,
9 the § 1252(b)(9) jurisdictional bar does not apply where claims, such as those brought here,
10 address systemwide detention conditions that are collateral to the removal process and are 11 effectively unreviewable through a petition for review. Finally, Plaintiffs have properly stated a 12 claim for deprivation of their statutory and constitutional rights to a full and fair hearing. For the 13 reasons that follow, we respectfully ask this Court to deny Defendants' motion and allow 14 Plaintiffs to proceed in their efforts to secure telephonic access and to certify the proposed class.

17 II. LEGAL STANDARD

18 Dismissal is “a harsh remedy which must be cautiously studied, not only to effectuate the 19 spirit of the liberal rules of pleading but also to protect the interests of justice.” Morgan v. City
20 of Rawlins, 792 F.2d 975, 978 (10th Cir. 1986). To survive a motion to dismiss under Rule 21 12(b)(6), the complaint “must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to ‘state a claim 22 to relief that is plausible on its face.’” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (quoting Bell 23 Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555, 570 (2007)). In deciding whether the plaintiff has 24 adequately stated a claim for relief, courts will view the totality of the circumstances as alleged 25 in the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. Jones v. Hunt, 410 F.3d 1221, 1229
26

(10th Cir. 2005). “The key question is whether a plaintiff has nudged his or her claim across the line from conceivable to plausible.” Woerner v. Bd. of Educ. of Rio Rancho Pub. Sch., No. 1:18-CV-1231-WJ-JFR, 2019 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 216793, at *10 (D.N.M. Dec. 16, 2019) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 570).

Federal courts must have a statutory basis for asserting subject matter jurisdiction. Nicodemus v. Union Pac. Corp., 318 F.3d 1231, 1235 (10th Cir. 2003). In challenging subject matter jurisdiction, defendants may either facially attack the sufficiency of the complaint’s allegations, or present evidence to challenge the factual basis upon which subject matter jurisdiction rests. Merrill Lynch Bus. Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Nudell, 363 F.3d 1072, 1074 (10th Cir. 2004). On motions to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction that raise a facial attack on the sufficiency of the complaint’s allegations as to subject matter jurisdiction, the Court considers the complaint’s allegations to be true. Clark v. United States, 234 F. Supp. 3d 1127, 1134 (D.N.M. 2014) (citing Ruiz v. McDonnell, 299 F.3d 1173, 1180 (10th Cir. 2002)).

III. ARGUMENT

A. Named Plaintiffs Have Standing to Bring this Action on Behalf of the Proposed Class

1. Plaintiffs meet the Article III standing requirements.

Defendants’ failure to provide basic telephone access to Plaintiffs has interfered with Plaintiffs’ ability to obtain and access counsel and has resulted in Plaintiffs’ prolonged detention and inability to prepare for their immigration proceedings – a problem ICE can remedy with minimal effort. See, e.g., Lyon v. ICE, N.D. Cal. No. 3:13-cv-05878, Stipulated Settlement, ECF No. 280-1 (settling ICE telephone access case).

Standing has three elements: (1) plaintiff must suffer an injury in fact that is actual or imminent; (2) the injury must be fairly traceable to the challenged action of the defendant; and

(3) it must be likely that the injury will be redressed by the relief requested. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992).² When evaluating a plaintiff's standing at the motion to dismiss stage, both the trial and reviewing courts must accept as true all material allegations of the complaint, and must construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party. Cressman v. Thompson, 719 F.3d 1139, 1144 (10th Cir. 2013).

Plaintiff Gomez Carranza alleges that Defendants' policies and practices have caused him great difficulty communicating with his counsel. Complaint ("Compl."), Dkt. Entry No. 1, at ¶ 70. See also Decl. of Gomez Carranza ¶ 17, Dkt. Entry No. 6. Stripped of his right to access counsel, Plaintiff Gomez Carranza's detention was prolonged because he was unable to prepare his defense for his removal hearing, effectively forcing him to move to continue the hearing. Compl. at ¶ 75. Similarly, Plaintiff Torres Jauregui has sat in immigration detention far longer than necessary because Defendants' policies and procedures have caused him great difficulty communicating with his counsel. Compl. at ¶ 78. He has been prevented from preparing for his asylum hearing and therefore was forced to move to continue the hearing on multiple occasions. Compl. at ¶ 81-82. See also Decl. of Torres Jauregui at ¶ 4 ("Here on the inside, they don't make phone calls available for preparing my case."). Injunctive relief that includes mandating that Defendants provide free confidential and private legal telephone access to Plaintiffs that is not unreasonably limited in duration will redress Plaintiffs' injuries.

Because Defendants have made it impossible for Named Plaintiffs to speak with their attorneys with the time and privacy necessary to prepare for their immigration hearings or other legal matters, they have been denied the right to access counsel, the right to a full and fair

² Because Defendants do not cite the elements of standing, or address or dispute the "fairly traceable" or "redressability" prongs, Plaintiffs focus their analysis on "injury in fact." Nevertheless, it is clear that Plaintiffs' injuries would be redressed by the requested relief designed to remedy the telephone access problems at El Paso and Otero. See Compl. at 28-29.

1 hearing, and the right to petition the government, including to seek to terminate their removal
2 proceedings altogether. Without access to counsel, a full and fair hearing, and the right to 3 petition the government, Named Plaintiffs have each personally suffered from constitutional
4 violations and prolonged detention. The Supreme Court, the Tenth Circuit, and federal courts
5 nationwide routinely find that violations of constitutional rights alone constitute irreparable
6 injury. See Elrod v. Burns, 427 U.S. 347, 373 (1976) (“The loss of First Amendment freedoms, 7 for even minimal periods of time, unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury.”); Kikumura v.
8 Hurley, 242 F.3d 950, 963 (10th Cir. 2001) (“[W]hen an alleged constitutional right is involved, 9 most courts hold that no further showing of irreparable injury is necessary.”); Benjamin v.
10 Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 185 (2d Cir. 2001) (“[W]here the right at issue is provided directly by the 11 Constitution or federal law, a prisoner has standing to assert that right even if the denial of that 12 right has not produced an actual injury.”). And prolonged detention is alone an injury in fact 13 with long-term consequences. See Gerstein v. Pugh, 420 U.S. 103, 114 (1975) (noting that 14 “consequences of prolonged detention” may be serious, including interruption of one’s source of 15 income and impairment of one’s family relationships); Diop v. ICE/Homeland Sec., 656 F.3d 16 221, 227 (3d Cir. 2011) (finding that prolonged immigration detention, caused in part by “a 17 combination of continuances to find a lawyer” “was certainly an injury in fact, caused by the 18 Government”); Xuyue Zhang v. Barr, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 54424, at *19 (C.D. Cal. Mar. 27, 19 2020) (“[T]he Court finds that each passing day Petitioner spends within the walls of 20 [immigration detention] is an irreparable injury: a day of freedom he cannot get back.”); Ramirez
21 v. United States Immigration & Customs Enforcement, 2020 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 115875, *225
22 (D.D.C. July 2, 2020) (“Courts in this and other jurisdictions have found that deprivations of 23 physical liberty are the sort of actual and imminent injuries that constitute irreparable harm and
25
26
27

1 have likewise recognized that the major hardship posed by needless prolonged detention is a
 2 form of irreparable harm.”).

3 2. Defendants’ narrow standing argument concedes that Named Plaintiffs
 4 have standing, but impermissibly conflates standing with class
 5 certification.

6 Defendants raise a narrow argument on Named Plaintiffs’ standing. Defendants
 7 acknowledge that Named Plaintiffs have standing to bring this action on behalf of detained 8 individuals who, due to Defendants’ institution-wide policies, experience “difficulty with 9 telephone communications with their counsel during their removal proceedings.” MTD at 2, 9 10 (“Because Named Plaintiffs personally allege only difficulty communicating with counsel to 11 prepare for removal-related hearings, they have standing to bring claims based solely on those 12 injuries.”) (emphasis added).

13 Instead, Defendants assert that Named Plaintiffs lack standing to bring claims on behalf
 14 of class members who have characteristics that Named Plaintiffs do not share, including class 15 members who speak rare languages, who are disabled, who are indigent,³ and who have 16 immigration proceedings other than removal proceedings. This is not a standing argument, but 17 an argument as to Named Plaintiffs’ typicality and adequacy to represent the class, and, as such, 18 is not appropriate to raise here. See Donelson v. United States, 730 F. App’x 597, 602 (10th Cir.
 19 2018) (“We have cautioned against conflating the independent doctrines of standing and 20 adequacy of a class representative.”) See also Colo. Cross Disability Coal. v. Abercrombie & 21 Fitch Co., 765 F.3d 1205, 1213 (10th Cir. 2014) (“Although the concepts of standing and 22 adequacy of status to maintain a class action appear related, they are independent criteria and 23 must be evaluated separately.”).

 26
 27 ³ The Complaint alleges that Named Plaintiff Gomez Carranza is indigent. See Compl. at ¶
 75. See also Declaration of Franklin Gomez Carranza, Dkt. No. 6, at ¶ 13.

1 To illustrate the difference between standing and class certification, the Tenth Circuit has 2 provided an example: “in assessing whether an injunction might apply to multiple locations of a
3 single company, we do not require a named plaintiff to prove standing as to each location.
4 Instead, the scope of relief for that single claim would turn on the application of Fed. R. Civ. P.
5 23.” Donelson, 730 F. App’x. at 602. This example is particularly apt when reviewing 6 Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss (“MTD”). Defendants assert that Named Plaintiff Gomez
7 Carranza lacks standing, in part, because he “does not allege any inability to access counsel or 8 evidence while he was housed at El Paso prior to being transferred to Otero.” MTD, Dkt. Entry
9 No. 23, at 7. First of all, that is factually incorrect.⁴ But as the Tenth Circuit made clear, the 10 question of whether a Named Plaintiff has standing does not depend on an analysis of whether he 11 has suffered an injury at each location alleged. See Colo. Cross Disability Coal., 765 F.3d at 12 1212 (finding that named plaintiff had standing to bring an Americans with Disabilities Act
13 claim for inaccessible Hollister storefronts nationwide, even though she had no intention to visit 14 every store and only experienced an injury at a single storefront).
15
17
18
19
20
21
22

23 ⁴ Contrary to Defendants’ assertion, Named Plaintiff Gomez Carranza does allege an 24 access to counsel injury while detained at El Paso. See Compl. at ¶ 70-71 (“Ever since being
25 detained, Plaintiff Gomez Carranza has had great difficulty communicating with his counsel 26 because of ICE’s unconstitutional restrictions on his telephone access in El Paso and Otero.... At 27 El Paso, Plaintiff Gomez Carranza faced limited access to telephones, including extremely poor connectivity issues.”) See also Gomez Carranza Declaration, Dkt. No. 6 at ¶ 6-7 (“Ever since being detained in ICE custody, I have had difficulty communicating with my attorney because of limited access to telephones. When I was detained in El Paso, my attorney visited me in person because the telephones were not a reliable means of communication.”).

1 3. Defendants’ standing arguments fail because they conflate claims and 2 allegations, continuing to improperly characterize a Rule 23 adequacy of 3 representation argument as standing.

4 A named plaintiff must possess standing as to each individual claim asserted in a 5 complaint. DaimlerChrysler Corp. v. Cuno, 547 U.S. 332, 352 (2006). Defendants, however,
6 appear to conflate claims and allegations. Named Plaintiffs Gomez Carranza and Torres
7 Jauregui possess standing for each claim alleged here, even if they have not personally
8 experienced every allegation in the complaint.

9 For example, the complaint alleges that Defendants’ institution-wide policies and 10 practices do not provide information on telephone access to Plaintiffs who speak rare languages.
11 See Compl. at ¶ 7.j. This allegation does not render Named Plaintiffs, who speak Spanish, 12 without standing to bring claims asserting violations of their constitutional and statutory rights to 13 access counsel, to a full and fair hearing, and to petition the government. Additionally,
14 Defendants highlight Plaintiffs’ allegation that Defendants do not provide telephone access
15 assistance to disabled class members, asserting there is no standing because Named Plaintiffs do 16 not personally suffer from physical disabilities. MTD at 3. But Named Plaintiffs do not lack 17 standing because their injuries stemming from Defendants’ violations of their rights to access 18 counsel, to a full and fair hearing, and to petition the government differ in the details from a 19 disabled class member. “As long as the named Plaintiffs can demonstrate that they have 20 standing to assert the claims they have alleged, whether the named Plaintiffs can represent 21 certain proposed class members is better addressed at the class certification stage.” Abraham v.
22 WPX Prod. Prods., LLC, 184 F. Supp. 3d 1150, 1199 (D.N.M. 2016) (finding that named 23 plaintiffs had standing to bring a lawsuit brought on behalf of owners of royalty and overriding 24 royalty interests even though named plaintiffs were not royalty owners, but rather only 25
26
27

1 overriding royalty interest owners, because they needed only establish that at least one named
2 plaintiff suffered the injury that gives rise to each claim).

4 4. Lewis v. Casey does not support Defendants' position.

5 Defendants' reliance on Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343 (1996), is misplaced. In Lewis,
6 post-conviction plaintiffs alleged an injury in a subpar prison law library that would prevent 7 them from bringing constitutional claims in the future. The Court found that because there was 8 no "freestanding right to a law library," plaintiffs had to "go one step further and demonstrate 9 that the alleged shortcomings in the library ... hindered his efforts to pursue a legal claim." Id. at 10 351.

12 Here, Plaintiffs do not assert that they have a standalone right to telephone access and 13 that the mere subpar telephone infrastructure is the injury. Rather, Plaintiffs allege that they 14 have a right to access counsel, a right to a full and fair hearing, and a right to petition the 15 government and that the subpar telephone infrastructure and Defendants' telephone access 16 policies and practices have obstructed their constitutional rights. For Named Plaintiffs, the 17 telephone access at Otero and El Paso have resulted in concrete injuries, including an inability to 18 communicate with counsel; an inability to prepare for their immigration hearings; and a resulting 19 need to continually postpone their immigration hearings until such a time that their right to 20 access counsel is not obstructed, leading to prolonged and unnecessary debilitating detention.

22 The Lewis Court analogized the plaintiff there to "a healthy inmate who had suffered no 23 deprivation of needed medical treatment" claiming a "violation of his constitutional right to 24 medical care." Id. at 350. By no means are Named Plaintiffs "healthy inmates"—detained 25 individuals with unfettered access to counsel attempting to bring a class action on behalf of 26 detained individuals without adequate access to counsel. Even Defendants acknowledge that 27

1 Named Plaintiffs allege “difficulty communicating with counsel” and thus “they have standing to 2 bring claims” based on their injuries. MTD at 2. Based on Defendants’ own concessions, Lewis
 3 is distinguishable. See also Benjamin v. Fraser, 264 F.3d 175, 179, 185 (2d Cir. 2001)
 4 (distinguishing Lewis in a case brought by pretrial detained individuals challenging detention 5 conditions affecting attorney visitation and law libraries, finding that plaintiffs did not need to 6 establish an actual injury beyond the due process violation to have standing to assert a Sixth
 7 Amendment right to counsel claim). Thus, Defendants’ argument lacks merit.

9 B. 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9) is Not Applicable Here and Therefore the Court Has 10 Subject Matter Jurisdiction over Plaintiffs’ Claims

11 Defendants argue that the Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction based on a sweeping,
 12 unreasonable interpretation of the jurisdiction channeling provision at 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)(9)— 13 the breadth of which the Supreme Court has recently rejected. See Dep’t of Homeland Sec. v.
 14 Regents of the Univ. of California, 140 S. Ct. 1891, 1907 (2020); Nielsen v. Preap, 139 S. Ct.
 15 954, 960, 962 (2019); Jennings v. Rodriguez, 138 S. Ct. 830, 840-41 (2018). Section 1252(b)(9)
 16 removes jurisdiction from the district court of “all questions of law and fact . . . arising from any 17 action taken or proceeding brought to remove an alien from the United States[.]” 8 U.S.C. §
 18 1252(b)(9). Defendants contort Plaintiffs’ claims to fit into the § 1252(b)(9) jurisdiction-
 19 channeling box. But Plaintiffs’ claims are not about the right to counsel in removal proceedings
 20 alone; Plaintiffs challenge the conditions of their detention, which has resulted in little to no
 21 access to counsel, interfering with their statutory and constitutional rights. The Supreme Court
 22 has rejected Defendants’ sweeping view of § 1252(b)(9)’s jurisdictional bar, finding that 23 § 1252(b)(9) cannot be used to strip jurisdiction over claims that are collateral to the immigration
 24 removal process, or to shield the government from violations of law that cannot be meaningfully 25 reviewed on a petition for review from a final order of removal. Jennings, 138 S. Ct. at 840-41.
 26
 27

1 Plaintiffs’ claims, which arise from the unlawful conditions of their confinement, do not seek 2 review of any aspect of their removal proceedings, and cannot be remedied through the 3 administrative review process, do not fall within § 1252(b)(9)’s “zipper clause.” Id. at 853.

5 1. The Supreme Court has narrowly interpreted Section 1252(b)(9).

6 Contrary to Defendants’ arguments in this case, the Supreme Court has repeatedly 7 rejected any broad interpretation of § 1252(b)(9) that would sweep in Plaintiffs’ claims. In 8 Jennings, the Supreme Court considered whether § 1252(b)(9) strips a district court of 9 jurisdiction to hear a challenge to the government’s practice of prolonged detention of a 10 noncitizen for more than six months without an individualized bond hearing. 138 S. Ct. at 839.
11 Justice Alito’s plurality opinion in Jennings (joined in relevant part by Chief Justice Roberts and 12 Justice Kennedy) pointed to two fundamental principles to evaluate whether an issue of law or 13 fact is truly “arising from any action taken or proceeding brought to remove an alien from the 14 United States.” Id. at 839-40.

16 First, Justice Alito reasoned that legal questions that are “too remote” or collateral to the 17 removal process do not fall within the scope of § 1252(b)(9). Id. at 840-41 & n.3; see also id. at 18 876 (J. Breyer, dissenting) (observing that § 1252(b)(9) “by its terms applies only ‘[w]ith respect 19 to review of an order of removal under [§ 1252(a)(1)]’”) (quoting 8 U.S.C. § 1252(b)); J.E.F.M.
20 v. Lynch, 837 F.3d 1026, 1032 (9th Cir. 2016) (finding that § 1252(b)(9) does not apply to 21 “claims that are independent of or collateral to the removal process”). Justice Alito observed that 22 “uncritical literalism” in interpreting the phrase “arising from” could lead to “staggering results”
23 that “no sensible person could have intended.” Jennings, 138 S. Ct. at 840 (citations omitted).
24 Among those claims Justice Alito viewed as too remote were those “based on allegedly 25 inhumane conditions of confinement.” Id. at 840.
26
27

1 While the Supreme Court in Jennings did not decide the precise contours of § 1252(b)(9), 2 the Court identified the type of claims the immigrant Respondents were not presenting:
3 “[R]espondents are not asking for review of an order of removal; they are not challenging the 4 decision to detain them in the first place or to seek removal; and they are not even challenging
5 any part of the process by which their removability will be determined.” Id. at 841. The Court
6 reasoned that “under these circumstances, § 1252(b)(9) does not present a jurisdictional bar.” Id.
7 The same is true here. Plaintiffs do not challenge a removal order (none exists), they do not 8 challenge ICE’s decision to detain them or its decision to institute removal proceedings, and they 9 do not challenge the removal proceeding process itself. Rather, they challenge their 10 constitutional and statutory rights to communicate with the outside world while in detention. See 11 generally Compl.

13 Since Jennings, the Supreme Court has twice affirmed that claims which do not challenge
14 a removal order or removal proceedings are beyond the scope of § 1252(b)(9). There can be no 15 dispute that this is the case here. Most recently, in Regents of the University of California, which 16 addressed the legality of the Administration’s rescission of wide-scale prosecutorial discretion, 17 the Supreme Court confirmed that § 1252(b)(9) “‘does not present a jurisdictional bar’ where 18 those bringing suit ‘are not asking for review of an order of removal,’ ‘the decision . . . to seek 19 removal,’ or ‘the process by which . . . removability will be determined.’” 140 S. Ct. at 1907
20 (citing Jennings, 138 St. Ct. at 841, 875-76); see also Preap, 139 S. Ct. at 962 (same).
21

23 Second, in Jennings Justice Alito reasoned that “arising from” should not be interpreted 24 in a way that makes a claim “effectively unreviewable,” i.e., an interpretation that would 25 “depriv[e] that detainee of any meaningful chance for judicial review.” 138 S. Ct. at 840. In 26 particular, Justice Alito observed that where a claim involved prolonged detention, any review
27

1 tied to a final order of removal would not be “meaningful” because “[b]y the time a final order of 2 removal was eventually entered, the allegedly excessive detention would have already taken 3 place.” Id. “Cramming” those claims into review of removal orders would be “absurd.” Id.
 4 Accordingly, Plaintiffs’ access to counsel claims while they prolongedly sit in detention are not 5 subject to § 1252(b)(9)’s administrative exhaustion requirement. See id.

7 2. Section 1252(b)(9) does not apply to Plaintiffs’ claims because they are 8 collateral to the removal process.

9 Consistent with Justice Alito’s first point, it is well-established that claims which do not 10 challenge a removal order or the removal process fall outside the scope of § 1252(b)(9). See,
 11 e.g., J.E.F.M., 837 F.3d at 1032 (determining that “claims that are independent of or collateral to 12 the removal process do not fall within the scope of § 1252(b)(9)”; Ochieng v. Mukasey, 520
 13 F.3d 1110, 1115 (10th Cir. 2008) (holding § 1252(b)(9) no impediment to claim that “would not 14 be seeking review of an order of removal, but review of [petitioner’s] detention”); R.R. v.
 15 Orozco, No. CV 20-564 KG/GBW, 2020 WL 3542333, at 5-6 (D.N.M. June 30, 2020) 16 (finding petitioner’s detention challenge and claim to procedural protections under the 17 Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act (TVRPA) beyond scope of § 1252(b)(9)
 18 because petitioner “d[id] not merely challenge his removal order”).
 19

20 In this case, Plaintiffs do not seek review of the decision to place them in removal
 21 proceedings or any aspect of those proceedings. See generally Compl. Rather, Plaintiffs’ claims
 22 arise from Defendants’ policies and practices regarding telephone access in El Paso and Otero—
 23 a condition of confinement that unduly interferes with access to counsel and leads to prolonged 24 detention. Compl. at 1-4, ¶¶ 1-9; see also id. at 16, ¶¶ 56-58; id. at 20-21, ¶ 75; id. at 22-23,
 25 ¶ 82. Further, the interference with counsel does not just threaten Plaintiffs’ removal 26 proceedings, but threatens Plaintiffs’ legal rights in a variety of proceedings “in which 27

1 immigrants have statutory rights, for example Joseph hearings, as well non-immigration civil and 2 criminal matters, completely apart from the removal process.” Torres v. United States Dep’t of 3 Homeland Sec., 411 F. Supp. 3d 1036, 1049 (C.D. Cal. 2019); see also, e.g., Menocal v. GEO
4 Grp., Inc., 882 F.3d 905 (10th Cir.), cert. denied, 139 S. Ct. 143 (2018) (affirming class
5 certification of detained immigrants’ forced labor claims under the Trafficking Victims
6 Protection Act (TVPA)); R.R., 2020 WL 3542333, at *5-6 (granting, in part, preliminary 7 injunction to 17-year-old petitioner challenging government’s detention decision in violation of 8 the TVRPA). Plaintiffs seek only declaratory and injunction relief against Defendants that 9 would ameliorate these unlawful conditions. Compl. at 28-29. Any relief awarded to Plaintiffs
10 would have no impact on any removal order. See id. As such, Plaintiffs’ claims are “too 11 remote” to the removal process to require exhaustion under § 1252(b)(9).
12

14 Courts have repeatedly held that § 1252(b)(9) does not bar claims arising from 15 institution-wide unlawful conditions of immigration detention and prolonged immigration 16 detention. See, e.g., Jennings, 138 S. Ct. at 840-41; E.O.H.C. v. Sec’y United States Dep’t of 17 Homeland Sec., 950 F.3d 177, 185 (3d Cir. 2020) (stating that under Jennings, § 1252(b)(9) 18 “does not bar challenges to conditions of confinement”) (emphasis in original); S. Poverty Law 19 Ctr. v. U.S. Dep’t of Homeland Sec., No. CV 18-760 (CKK), 2020 WL 3265533, at *16 (D.D.C.
20 June 17, 2020) (finding no jurisdictional bar to substantive due process claim that punitive 21 immigration detention conditions limited access to counsel, but declining to address statutory 22 right to counsel claims); Cancino-Castellar v. Nielsen, 338 F. Supp. 3d 1107, 1116–17 (S.D. Cal.
23 2018) (due process claim that delay in appearing before immigration judge unlawfully prolonged 24 detention not barred by § 1252(b)(9)).
25
27

Defendants are wrong to suggest that there is a bright line rule against bringing right to counsel and due process claims in district court, even when those claims arise from conditions of confinement and are collateral to any removal proceedings. Defendants rely primarily on J.E.F.M., but in that case plaintiffs sought appointment of counsel at government expense in removal proceedings. 837 F.3d at 1029–30. Here, Plaintiffs’ do not seek any procedural protections in removal proceedings—rather they seek injunctive relief to remedy conditions of their confinement. Compl. at 28-29. Notably, the J.E.F.M. plaintiffs did not challenge the conditions of their confinement because they were not detained.

E.O.H.C. is likewise of no help to Defendants where, there, the court found § 1252(b)(9) barred plaintiffs’ statutory right to counsel claims that “had nothing to do with conditions of confinement,” and allowed Plaintiffs’ constitutional claims to go forward. 950 F.3d at 187-88. In this case, Plaintiffs’ claims have everything to do with conditions of confinement. Similarly, in Aguilar v. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enf’t, petitioners challenged their arrest and transfer away from counsel, but not unlawful conditions of confinement limiting attorney access. 510 F.3d 1, 13 (1st Cir. 2007) (noting “petitioners claim that their detention and subsequent transfer by the government infringed their rights to counsel”).⁵

⁵ Defendants cite a handful of district court cases, but none support Defendants’ position. See MTD at 12-14, 18. Several cases are distinguishable because the claims do not arise from institution-wide conditions of confinement. See Avilez v. Barr, No. 19-CV-08296-CRD, 2020 WL 570987, at *2-3 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 5, 2020) (challenging ICE decision to transfer individuals to facilities far from counsel); Anaya Murcia v. Godfrey, No. C19-587-JLR-BAT, 2019 WL 5597883, at *1 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 10, 2019), report and recommendation adopted, No. C19-587-JLR, 2019 WL 5589612 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 30, 2019) (noncitizen seeking return to United States following successful motion to reopen removal proceedings); Alvarez v. Sessions, 338 F. Supp. 3d 1042, 1044 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (challenging ICE decision to transfer individual to facility far from counsel); Mochama v. Zwetow, No. CV 14-2121-KHV, 2017 WL 36363, at *6 (D. Kan. Jan. 3, 2017) (alleging ICE officers failed to respond to noncitizen’s request to speak to counsel); Wheeler v. Unknown Named Agents of ICE, No. CV 16-6655 DOC (SS), 2016 WL 6126260, at *3 (C.D. Cal. Oct. 20, 2016) (alleging fourteen day stay in solitary confinement while in

1 Much more relevant is Torres v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., 411 F. Supp. 3d 1036,
 2 1047-1049 (C.D. Cal. 2019), a case directly on point, in which the court found jurisdiction over
 3 right to counsel and due process claims of individuals in immigration detention to whom ICE
 4 denied adequate telephone access. The Torres plaintiffs raised virtually identical challenges to 5 ICE telephone access policies and practices in a detention center in California. Id. at 1045
 6 (alleging inter alia failure to comply with ICE's Performance-Based National Detention
 7 Standards, failure to provide free, confidential, and private legal calls, failure to allow calls of 8 adequate duration and quality, and failure to charge reasonable rates for calls). The court 9 observed that, as here, "Plaintiffs take pains to tailor their claims only to the conditions of their 10 removal-related detention, and do not challenge the legal sufficiency or any procedural aspect of 11 their removal proceedings." Id. at 1048. In holding that § 1252(b)(9) did not bar the plaintiffs' 12 right to counsel claims, the court found that plaintiffs' access to counsel claims caused a range of 13 harms unconnected to removal proceedings, including the burden to the attorney-client
 14 relationship itself, as well harms in non-removal proceedings. Id. at 1048-49. The court 15 concluded that the plaintiffs had asserted right to counsel and due process claims "arising solely 16 from the conditions of their detention and assert[ed] rights that can be violated without reference
 17 to the effect on their underlying removal proceedings." Id. at 1049. Here too, Plaintiffs' claims

23 immigration detention violated individual's right to counsel). Two sought a specific procedural 24 protection in removal proceedings. See P.L. v. Immigration & Customs Enf't, No. 1:19-CV-
 25 01336 (ALC), 2019 WL 2568648, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 21, 2019) (seeking to limit use of video 26 teleconferencing in removal proceedings); Rivas Rosales v. Barr, No. 20-CV-00888-EMC, 2020
 27 WL 1505682, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 30, 2020) (same). To the extent that any of these cases support a bright line rule that all access to counsel and procedural due process claims arising from conditions of immigration detention must be channeled through a petition for review, regardless of their connection to the removal process, they are contrary to Supreme Court precedent and carry no persuasive weight. See Jennings, 138 S. Ct. at 840-41.

1 arise solely from the conditions of their detention and assert rights that can be vindicated without 2 challenging their removal proceedings. See id.

3 The holding in Torres is consistent with other decisions finding jurisdiction over access
4 to counsel and due process claims that are unrelated to any challenge to removal proceedings.
5 See Arroyo v. U.S. Dep't of Homeland Sec., No. SACV19815JGBSHKX, 2019 WL 2912848, at 6 *13 (C.D. Cal. June 20, 2019) (holding no jurisdictional bar where immigrants challenging their 7 transfer away from counsel “assert harm that accrues by conduct imposing significant burden on 8 the attorney-client relationship without looking to the effect of that burden on the underlying 9 removal proceedings”); Franco-Gonzales v. Holder, 767 F. Supp. 2d 1034, 1045 (C.D. Cal.
10 2010) (finding § 1252(b)(9) did not bar claims of mentally incompetent individuals seeking 11 appointed counsel in removal proceedings where the remedy would not provide relief in removal 12 proceedings but instead only “relief that would help to ensure their meaningful participation in 13 removal and/or custody proceedings” and where those claims could not be meaningfully raised 14 in a petition for review); cf. Rodriguez-Castillo v. Nielsen, No. 5:18-cv-1317-ODW-MAA, 2018 15 WL 6131172 (C.D. Cal. June 21, 2018) (granting temporary restraining order requiring 16 telephone access for jailed immigrants). Plaintiffs’ systemic claims arising from the conditions
17 of their confinement are simply not the sort of claims that must be “cramm[ed]” into a petition
18 for review. Jennings, 138 S. Ct. at 840.

21
22 3. Section 1252(b)(9) does not apply to Plaintiffs’ claims because they are 23 effectively unreviewable via a petition for review.

24 The second principle recognized by the Supreme Court’s analysis in Jennings is that § 25 1252(b)(9) should not strip jurisdiction from claims when it would deprive the individual of “any 26 meaningful chance for judicial review.” 138 S. Ct. at 840-41. “In other words, [§ 1252(b)(9)] 27 does not strip jurisdiction when aliens seek relief that courts cannot meaningfully provide

1 alongside review of a final order of removal. . . . [T]he point of the provision is to channel claims
 2 into a single petition for review, not to bar claims that do not fit within that process.” E.O.H.C.,
 3 950 F.3d at 186. In particular, the Supreme Court noted that a petition for review of a final order
 4 of removal is not an effective means for reviewing detention that predates entry of a final order 5 of removal because “by the time a final order of removal was eventually entered, the allegedly 6 [unlawful] detention would have already taken place.” 138 S. Ct. at 840.

8 In this case, Plaintiffs suffer prolonged detention because they are unable to access 9 counsel or prepare for hearings due to Defendants’ restrictions on telephone access. Compl. at 4, 10 ¶ 9; id. at 16, ¶ 57; id. at 18, ¶¶ 65-67; id. at 20-21, ¶ 75; id. at 22, ¶¶ 81-82. Waiting until a 11 removal order enters—if one ever does—will not remedy the harm Plaintiffs continue to suffer 12 unnecessarily languishing in immigration detention because of inadequate telephone access.
 13 Moreover, Plaintiffs cannot receive “meaningful review” of their claims through removal 14 proceedings because an immigration judge is “powerless to remedy the conditions alleged.”
 15 Torres, 411 F. Supp. 3d at 1049 (citing 8 C.F.R. §§ 1240.1, 1240.31, 1240.41); see Executive 16 Office of Immigration Review, Immigration Court Practice Manual, § 9.1(b) (July 2, 2020)
 17 (“Immigration Judges have no jurisdiction over . . . the conditions in the detention facility.”).
 18 Section 1252(b)(9) is a jurisdiction channeling provision, not a jurisdiction stripping provision,
 19 and therefore must not be read to deny meaningful review of Plaintiffs’ claims. See Torres, 411
 20 F. Supp. 3d at 1049; S. Poverty Law Ctr., 2020 WL 3265533, at *16 (finding § 1252(b)(9) 21 inapplicable to conditions of confinement claim in part because it would leave plaintiffs without 22 any remedy); Franco-Gonzales, 767 F. Supp. 2d at 1045 (mentally incompetent noncitizen’s 23 claims seeking appointed counsel not subject to exhaustion requirement where “they are unable 24 to meaningfully participate in their respective immigration proceedings”). For these reasons,
 25
 26
 27

1 Plaintiffs claims should not be channeled to the court of appeals but should be heard now before
2 this Court.

3 C. Plaintiffs Have a Right to a Full and Fair Hearing and Have Properly Stated
4 Their Fifth Amendment Due Process Claim

- 5 1. Plaintiffs have a statutory right to present evidence, which naturally
6 encompasses gathering evidence.

7 Defendants assert that Plaintiffs' Second Claim for Relief (Right to Full and Fair
8 Hearings), based in part on Plaintiffs' statutory right to gather and present evidence under 8 9 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(4)(B), should be dismissed because, while "this provision does provide an 10 alien the right 'to present evidence on the alien's own behalf,' it does not mention any right to 11 gather evidence in advance of the hearing." MTD at 18 (emphasis in original). Defendants'
12 argument is unsupported.

13 First, Defendants do not explain why the entire claim would need to be dismissed
14 because Plaintiffs characterize their right to "present evidence" as a right to "gather and present 15 evidence."
16

17 Second, a right to a "reasonable opportunity" to present evidence is meaningless if it does 18 not include the right to compile or organize that evidence. If the meaning of § 1229a(b)(4)(B)
19 were as narrow as Defendants suggest, then "presenting evidence" could only mean testifying on 20 one's own behalf because the detained individual would have no opportunity to obtain evidence
21 from outside of the detention facility. Yet, the language of the statute is "evidence," not 22 "testimony," even though elsewhere in the statute it distinguishes between testimony and 23 evidence. See 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(4)(C) (requiring that a complete record of "all testimony and 24 evidence produced at the proceeding" be kept) (emphasis added). The statute's use of this 25 specific language would be rendered superfluous and thus render's Defendants' argument as 26 meritless.
27

1 Third, courts have made clear that the right to present evidence goes hand in hand with 2 the right “to be heard” and “to press [one’s] case fully.” Torres-Chavez v. Holder, 567 F.3d
 3 1096, 1102 (9th Cir. 2009). See also Radic v. Fullilove, 198 F. Supp. 162, 165 (N.D. Cal. 1961)
 4 (“Under our form of Government, the right to a hearing embraces not only the right to present
 5 evidence in support of one’s position, but also a reasonable opportunity to know the claims of the 6 opposing party with the privilege of seeking to refute those claims.”) In Badwan v. Gonzales,
 7 494 F.3d 566, 567 (6th Cir. 2007), the Sixth Circuit found that an immigration judge abused his 8 discretion in denying petitioner’s unopposed motion for a continuance to obtain evidence. The 9 court found that petitioner should have been permitted to obtain a proper translation of a 10 document, essentially equating “presenting evidence” with obtaining evidence.

 13 2. Plaintiffs need not allege prejudice to satisfy the elements of a Fifth
 14 Amendment Due Process Claim, but have done so by alleging prolonged 15 detention.

16 Defendants assert that “[t]o prevail on their Fifth Amendment full-and-fair hearing claim, 17 Named Plaintiffs must show prejudice.” MTD at 19. But, to state a Due Process claim,
 18 Plaintiffs must satisfy just two elements: a protected liberty interest and denial of an appropriate
 19 level of process. Rezaq v. Nalley, 2010 WL 5157317, at *4 (D. Colo. Aug. 17, 2010), aff’d, 677
 20 F.3d 1001 (10th Cir. 2012). In support of their position, Defendants cite U.S. v. Aguirre-Tello, 21 353 F.3d 1199, 1204 (10th Cir. 2004), which held that “when a previous deportation order is 22 attacked” on a petition for review, a petitioner must demonstrate prejudice in order to show that a 23 deportation proceeding was fundamentally unfair. The court adopted the “reasonable likelihood”
 24 of a different outcome standard, rather than the stricter “would have obtained” a different 25 outcome standard. Id. at 1209. Here, Plaintiffs are not attacking any removal order, and thus,
 26 Aguirre-Tello is inapposite. Still, as explained further in Section IV(A)(i), supra, Plaintiffs have 27

1 been prejudiced by the prolonged detention resulting from the effective deprivation of the 2 hearings.

4 IV. CONCLUSION

5 For the reasons stated above, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court to deny 6 Defendants' Motion to Dismiss.
